THE NEW CHILDREN'S MUSEUM OFFERS CHILDREN DIRECT ACCESS TO ARTISTS THROUGH PROJECT-BASED SUMMER CAMP PROGRAM

Kids explore art making and design in concert with professionally trained artists, June 20–August 12

May 26, 2011 — San Diego — The New Children's Museum has launched an extended series of summer camps for children entering grades one through six. Focusing on inspiring imagination and cultivating creativity through project-based learning, kids have the opportunity to explore traditional and contemporary forms of art making hand-in-hand with seasoned artists. In small groups, an active and personal relationship with each instructor enables children to ask questions and experiment with new ways of thinking.

Bringing working artists and children together allows the community to experience the creative process first hand and facilitates an open exchange of ideas. The New Children's Museum engages a variety of accomplished artists who are dedicated to creating meaningful experiences for kids and families. From the artists who work directly with visitors every day in the galleries to those commissioned for our exhibitions, the Museum strives to foster a new generation of San Diego artists.

Multiple sessions of summer camp will be held from June 20 to August 12. Families can register online at thinkplaycreate.org/education.
